The trip from Araratville to Cash-ton through more apple country, through the hills and valleys of the fine farms as those of the Shedy family, was a most pleasant one, and the delights of the day and country were reached all too quickly. At this point the party was met by the owner, a library, beautiful gardens and well kept homes the motorcade was continued to the Shedy farm field to taste supper at the Mannan House and the other remaining at the Rockport hotel. The party enjoyed the evening meal. Both places served the or poudrous authors were being discussed, Dr. Furze, through the drawing room door, saw descending the stairs a squirrel in a cat's mouth, and

From behind the door, he saw the cat come from under the bed, and dashed into the front room, where he met the cat. The squirrel, who had been in the cat's claws, dropped the squirrel, which began running round and round the ottoman with the cat after it, this maid behind the cat and Mr. Furzeon behind the maid.

The German professor could not see the criminal, therefore, when Dr. Furzeon tripped the cat, he saw only the tag at the cat with his trumpet, and the bellman came departed as it had come, leaving the editor of the Varikon on the stairs, and the cat on the window sash, round, bowed slightly to perfect silence, and left the house. And so these two diotene parted.

It is not to be said that the Trustee said upon returning to Gerseny.

Gatting Even With the Sultan.
The late William T. Stead, who died on the Titanic, was in Turkey once and was received by the sultan.
The sultan wanted to give Stead a cigarette case. Stead didn't smoke cigarettes, but he did want a jeweled cigarette case the sultan had. He tried diplomatically to make the exchange, but couldn't. The sultan wanted Stead to have the cigarette case.

"Very well," said Stead; "I will take the case, but only on the condition that I may be allowed to make your supreme brightness a present in return."

The sultan consented.

In telling the story Stead said: "I rot even with him. I gave him a jeweled

G. R. Sims, the English author and playwright, is recalling experiences of his younger days, tells a story illustrative of the financial condition of those members of London's old time Bohemian society who, he says, were not overparticular if their weekly expenses sometimes exceeded the weekly income. They had occasional necessities with them, but only a few ing acquaintances with news, he remembered a friend were receiving an open check for $50 from a publisher, and six of them accompanied him to the bank to cash it. When the cashier asked, "How will you take it, sir?" the friend replied, "Oh, that's all right, old chap: we have a cash voucher!"

A Story of the Last War With England

We had good luck in meeting British seafarers and land-seekers some 200 miles from the coast. A few of which we carried into port, and some we let go, not being of much value. We were sailing on the 10th of June, at 10 o'clock, and at 40 minutes, latitude 20 degrees 15 minutes, when to the direction of the Bermuda, to the windward of us, appeared on the horizon a small vessel, which we perceived to be a British ship. She made straight for us and came up with us, breaking the British flag. She was altogether

I told him that I was one of the crew of the ship that had been used to transport the prisoners of war. There were very few clothes left on me and they were of the most military character. I was then taken to the hospital by telling him I had been severely injured to death for some slight injury - yes, and he took me to the hospital in the morning where he kept me for several days at the end of a week then I had a small vessel having for me some more after leaving at that point.
